

- Value-based methods

- In value-based methods, instead of learning a policy function, we learn a value function that maps a state to the expected value of being at that state.

- The value of a state is the expected discounted return the agent can get if it starts in that state.

ex: A maze where each house has a value, and the houses that are closer to the end have a higher value.